2. General: The JCR is made up of the following political-military organizations: the Argentine ERP (People's Revolutionary Army); the Chilean MIR (Movement of the Revolutionary Left); the Bolivian ELN (National Liberation Army); and the Uruguayan MLN (National Liberation Movement, also known as the Tupamaros). The JCR maintains a specific strategy for the region.

3. Organization

a. Propaganda Sector: The press medium for the JCR is the Latin American Press Agency, which since 1974 has published bulletins containing information about the organization and other seditious movements. The headquarters is in Venezuela, with branches in Argentina. Its distribution is world-wide, by means of a weekly bulletin published in several languages. The JCR also publishes "Che Guevara" magazine, which is distributed clandestinely.

b. Movie Sector: This consists of a team called "Cinema de Base," which produces both short and full-length films in Havana, Cuba, through an agreement with the Cuban-Argentine Cultural Exchange Institute.

c. Documentation Sector: This sector provides logistic support to members of each participating organization in the form of all types of identification papers. The techniques of this sector were developed by the MLN-Tupamaros.

d. Communications Sector: JCR members communicate by means of book codes, generally using books with wide circulation. Messages are sent via regular mail.

e. Team Schools: These are political-military schools, where militant members are prepared for assignments to be carried out later. These schools do not exist in Uruguay at present, but are highly developed in Argentina.

f. Safe-sites Sector: The Tupamaros are the specialists in this field. They build three types: fixed (in houses), portable, and in vehicles.

EO25x1

4. Characteristics of JCR Action: The JCR is fundamentally a strategic organization, seeking to attain durability, security, development and projection of existing seditious centers, or those in formation in Latin America, with expansionist intentions. In seeking to attain these goals, the JCR focuses on three factors: solidarity, ties among participating organizations, and finances.

a. Solidarity: Primarily assisting persecuted political prisoners or expatriates. Solidarity begins the moment a constituent is detained, through legal support by a select group of lawyers to free the individual, who immediately upon release leaves the country. This accomplished, and depending on the qualifications of the individual, he is given a new position and assignment.

b. Ties among participating organizations: In this area there is much activity, through contacts of all types, especially with international groups. This offers the possibility of stronger ties, distributing news of the work of seditious organizations internationally, and opportunities to pressure governments.

c. Finances: This area concerns the disbursing of funds obtained from assaults, abductions, and donations. These funds subsidize propaganda campaigns, arms, and logistics, as well as the necessities for clandestine survival.

5. JCR locations: European cities in which qualified Marxist ideologists are located are Paris, Lisbon, Brussels, and Rome. The "chiefs" intend to establish "embassies" in Germany and Holland. [] Comment: [] does not specify whether "Germany" refers to East Germany or West Germany.) Mexico, Cuba and Peru are Latin American countries where there is strong support for the JCR. The National Liberation Army (ELN) is Colombia has initiated contacts with the JCR. Portugal is the headquarters of one of the more important JCR "embassies." The attitude of some Portuguese Army officers toward JCR activities in many cases facilitates the "military training" of JCR members.

6. Conclusions: The ideological discipline of the JCR leaves no room for doubt that it coincides with the ideas of Regis Debray concerning a program of subversive macro-structure, that is, the establishment of a "strategic focal point" with the objective of maintaining "operational focal points." The JCR has done all it can to ensure that organizations condemned to total extinction are rescued and sustained by international subversion. The supranational function of the JCR is based on Marxist principles of international class struggle, taking as a starting point the Southern Cone of Latin America. The JCR is a planning element, the central element of the strategic plan, and the organizations which participate in the JCR are independent in their respective tactical planning. The JCR's action centers and locations have been selected with great caution, permitting the development of unlimited activities not only because of the legality of its existence in certain countries but because of the facility of contacts on an international scale.
